Dear Andy:

Subject: Reimbursement to EEC

In reply to your letter of 16 May pertaining to the expenditure of funds by the EEC for travel of candidates for FBID positions, you may handle the problem as follows.

Pay the EEC with personal funds and obtain a detailed receipt. A reimbursement voucher may then be submitted to headquarters. (Sample attached) Reimbursement will then be made from Confidential Funds.

I should say, however, that if the EEC has made no mention of this, I see no need for your experiencing any embarrassment. Indeed I believe the EEC may feel that they are doing something for us in return for the extra-operational things we do for them. We are presently considering long-term loan of $3600 worth of equipment.

Sincerely,

25X1

Subj: Reimbursement for Travel Expense to Recruits

Dear Alan:

As you know, the London Bureau does considerable recruiting for both the Mediterranean and Austrian Bureaus, usually through the facilities of the BBC. For recruits called in from points outside of London, this often represents quite an expenditure of money. Usually there is one trip for an interview followed, in many cases, by a second for testing by the BBC. It has recently come to our attention that the BBC reimburses prospective candidates for such expenditure.

STAT

The case I have in mind is that of [redacted], interviewed by FBIS in London and later tested at our request by the BBC for Austria. [redacted] has received a security clearance, has accepted an appointment, and is to report for duty in Vienna in early June. As will be seen by copies of correspondence enclosed, the BBC reimbursed him for travel expenses incurred in the process of being tested for us. I can only assume that the reason this outlay was brought to our attention, whereas similar expenses in connection with recruiting for Cyprus have not been mentioned, is that in the latter instances the BBC benefits directly from such recruiting.

STAT

In any event, since FBIS regulations prohibit such payments it puts us in the rather embarrassing position of (1) not being able to meet the BBC policy in the matter of recruiting procedure, and (2) not having authority to reimburse the BBC for an expenditure on our behalf.

I would appreciate knowing if there is any way of reimbursing the BBC for the payment made to [redacted] and for similar payments which may be made in the future.

Sincerely,

[redacted]
